A party of engineers were tracing a township line across some farm lands in Illinois. As chance would have it, the line passed directly through a large barn having double doors on each side of it, and they found they could continue their measurements through the barn by opening the doors and thus avoiding the dreaded detour. The owner watched their progress with considerable interest, but made no comment until they had reached the farther side of the barn, when he asked: "That a railroad ye-all surveyin' fer?" "Certainly," replied the chief, with a humorous twinkle in his eye. The farmer meditated a bit as he closed the barn doors behind them, when he remarked somewhat aggressively: "I hain't got no objections ter havin' yer railroad on my farm, but I'll be darned if I'm going ter open and shut them doors for yer train to go through!"
